Market commentary

Political uncertainty and trade concerns meant that global equity market performance was mixed in the third quarter. US equities continued to outperform and saw records broken with the longest American bull market ever. UK equities lagged behind in part due to uncertainty in the Brexit talks. European markets in general underperformed as concerns surrounding Italy and Turkey intensified but economic indicators are pointing towards future growth. Asia Pacific equities were more resistant to the political, trade and monetary policy worries. A number of central banks including the US, Canada, UK, and Norway increased interest rates in the third quarter contributing to a lowering bond prices. Concerns from the EU over the new Italian government's budget added to the volatility of their bond market. A sharp rise in Italian yields contributed to an underperforming Eurozone. With Brexit uncertainty likely to remain high right up to the deadline in May 2019 further interest rate rises are not expected in the short term. The prospect of further rises in the future saw Gilt yields rise across the board. US Corporate bonds performed well this quarter spurred on by robust economic growth and earnings data.
