

3 things to compare before you transfer...

people's pension

Charges

Every pension company charges you for looking after your money. This is usually called an annual management charge (AMC). Even a small difference between these percentages could mean you'll be thousands of pounds better or worse off in retirement, which can impact the lifestyle you want to lead.

Investment performance

Pensions are invested, so the value of your pot can go up and down. It's hard to predict the future, but comparing how each provider's investments have grown over time is a smart move.

Service and satisfaction

Charges and performance will have the biggest impact on your pot at retirement. But it's important you get the right support when you need it, from a real person over the phone for example. How confident are you that your provider is easy to contact when you need them?
